

7 DOCTORS WHO DIDN'T SACRIFICE THEIR CREATIVITY FOR MEDICINE

Victor Wahby, MD, PhD, Internist, Founder & Maestro of the Medical Musical Group Orchestra

"A common thread between medicine and music is that both administer healing to human beings as well as societies. I was interested in music before I went to medical school; however, the study and practice of medicine enhanced my belief and experience of music as another mode of healing.

[Finding the time to practice medicine and work on my music] is always a challenge. However, in 1990 I helped launch the Medical Musical Group. This chorus and symphony orchestra drew in many colleagues and volunteers. Because of their fabulous collaboration, we were together able to perform national and even international concerts.

Obviously your medical career and service come first. If, however, you can connect with like-minded colleagues, you probably will be able to accomplish a lot through 'orchestrated' efforts (no pun intended)."
